TIM MASTIK

Tim Mastik's work echoes his obsession with shape, repetition and material by researching the endless options of handmade print techniques. By deconstructing his designs, playing with rhythm, symmetry and asymmetry, he creates an unexpected dynamic between color and shape. Geometry and minimalism often form the foundation of his designs, characterised by seemingly simplistic shapes and great attention to detail. The creative process is essential as his experiments on materiality play a key role in establishing a personal texture.

Using selfmade tools to create his series, using the ink such that every applied part is unique as a dialogue between precision and imperfection, where the material properties of the tools stand central to the creation process, his work methods imprints an often-unexpected variation to an otherwise perfect regularity, an individual interpretation of béton brut on paper and as iterative studies of mass and shape driven by repetition, subtraction, overlays, and framing.

It is both uniqueness and an unfolding of a sequence which characterises Tim's works, singular and endless at the same time, his experiments with printing techniques providing him with ever new shapes and structures.

DYNAMIC MONOTILES

The dynamic monotiles series result of a creative process that emerged from Tim Mastik's experiments with form through repetition and material using selfmade tools, interpreting a certain frequency between the raw concrete on the paper so that mass and shape by overlay, subtraction and framing lead to a unique print. Each layer of ink is arranged in a certain way so that its application remains unrepeatable. The union between precision and the coincidence of imperfection as a result of the working method leading to always new and infinite compositions and bring a dimension of depth through linear but irregular shapes and colours.
